A Card From the Proprietor of Swaney's.

A card is hereby called to the fact that I am, after a year of rest, at home again, and in possession of the famous "Swaney's" (a survival of the old days) resort, now the most healthful pleasure seekers who contemplate resorting to a watering place during the coming summer, will find it.

I have added very greatly to my capacity and accommodations at residence, and will make all necessary improvements, which will contribute to the comfort and pleasure of those seeking pleasure, rest and health.

The vitalizing power of the water is sufficient, and there needs no additional commendation.

The ensuing season promises to be one of interest and prosperity. In fact, it will be the epoch in the history of the springs.

Alas! we have indicated their coming on camp, and have secured lodgings for the entire season.

Two boarding houses are situated within a few yards of the springs, and both are equal to the accommodation of fifty to seventy-five guests.

Those staying either of the above houses will have access to all the accommodations the springs can afford.

Those wishing especial accommodations should write at once, as these gentlemen will have first choice of rooms.

I will be prepared to furnish information concerning the springs, and will be happy to answer any question that can be asked.

Address the undersigned, always.

Respectfully,

HAROLD SWANGO, Proprietor.

SPENCER COOPER, Publisher.

A few months since a young man came through here who represented that he was working in the interest of Harper's Magazine, and writing up Eastern Kentucky for publication in Harper's Magazine for March. He was especially profuse in proffering a copy of the March number to the writer of this, and we were more than anxious to see it, as we are all articles tending to Eastern Kentucky's boom. So far, however, we have heard nothing of the young man or the magazine, and fear he was a fraud. His name was Snyder, and while we suspected at the time that he was not what he pretended to be, the sequel shows that he was neither than we supposed. His smooth face, slick tongue, suave manner and sly scheme foisted us finally.

While the B's of the State are quite busy buzzing around the gubernatorial hive, the H's, and especially those who belong to Eastern Kentucky, are happy and hopeful. The Democratic ticket will very likely be,

HARRIS and HAZELRIGG, maybe HARRIS and HAMILTON, or maybe HAZELRIGG and HINES, or maybe HAMILTON and HOLT, or maybe HAZELRIGG and HILT, or maybe HARRIS and HILT.

Some one of these combinations is almost certain to be the one chosen at the State Convention. There are sufficient H's in the list to give every eockney one for 'orse and 'ouse, and before the convention adjourns there is apt to be a h—lloptore of a time. But mind if Hazelrigg don't thimble-rig the hill heap, and get first place.

Col. John T. Hazelrigg, the brilliant editor of the West Liberty Gem, and the silver-tongued orator of the Licking Valley, on Monday last made a speech at Mt. Sterling announcing his candidacy for the office of Lieutenant Governor. We do not know whether any one opposed him in debate or not, but if so, the other fellow must now feel he has met the chin-music mastodon of the mountains and passed through a second Mountain Meadow Massacre.

The Stanton Monitor, published at Stanton, Powell county, is before us. It is a neat six-column folio, full of news, and outranks its predecessor, the Journal. Atkinson & Horton are editors and proprietors, and we wish them large success.

The Greenup Herald is the title of a neat six-column folio published at Greenup, Ky., C. H. Callon, editor and proprietor. We welcome it to our exchange list, and Callon the people of that section give it a liberal support.

An iron truss bridge in the suburbs of Boston, Mass., on the Boston and Providence railroad, went down with six passenger cars on Monday, the 14th inst. Thirty-nine people were killed and seventy-eight wounded.

Eighteen men of the Bald Knobber gang are in irons at Ozark, Mo., for the brutal murder of two innocent young men, and it is thought they will all be hung.

EASTERN KENTUCKY

COMPARED WITH GEORGIA, ALABAMA, AND PENNSYLVANIA.

With the Coming of a Railroad Will Come the Realization of Our Unbounded Resources.

"Indeed," in a communication to the Mt. Sterling Gazette, says: "When I wrote you a short time since on this subject I did not know that almost the very idea that I attempted to advance was assuming shape in the manner it is, and I am glad for the Railroad Desert of Eastern Kentucky that there is a prospect of a grand trunk line from Cumberland Gap to Covington, Ky., and I can say that from the knowledge I have of the country there through, I do not think there could be a road built anywhere through Kentucky that would redound so much to the development of the State, for it would pass directly through some of the finest mineral and timber lands in the State, to say nothing of the salt and building stone along the line. Besides the completion of a through line would open up the way for branch lines up the various tributaries of the Kentucky River, the Kanawha, the Cheat, the Gauley, the Little Kanawha, and the Ohio, and the vast veins of coal in Morgan, Wolfe, Breathitt, Harlan, Clay, Perry and other counties would be available to the timberless portions of the State—I mean Central Kentucky. Also the fine coking coal of Eastern Kentucky would be available to the Southern coast and Chicago and at various points along the line; and blast furnaces would be erected all over the mountains and Kentucky would be redeemed from poverty and pauperism, as the coal regions of Pennsylvania are by the development of the coal, iron, oil and gas of that region, and every pauper county in our State that is even made self-sustaining—so to speak—would be that much lifted from the shoulders of the present taxpaying counties, and thus the whole State would be benefited to that extent. And when we think of the number of such counties in Kentucky, how can we withhold so great a boon from ourselves as the lightening of our taxes to such an extent."

Then when we consider the capital and the increase in population that the opening up of these hills will invite into the State, we may well say that this generation will see Kentucky one of the most prosperous States in the Union. Look at Georgia and Alabama! Both of them crushed and devastated by the war, as soon as they got upon their legs again, and the demoralization caused by the war had somewhat passed away, they invested capital and skilled labor in the production of cotton and in an immense number of mills and power houses from every where in reach are continuing to boom there, while Kentucky rests back in her self-importance and her self-sufficiency and says through her representatives sent to that apology called a Legislature, that "we ain't again to give no rights to any blamned speculators to do and dig and tear down our hills and deface our mountains and carry off our wealth!" And thus she plays the "dog in the manger," while others are making a fortune—while men who take an active interest in the progress of our city and country meet. There seems to be but one sentiment in regard to this matter. All desire the road and seem willing to do all that can be done honorably and fairly to get the road. With this road secured to Lexington, other roads now or about to be located will seek Lexington as the place offering the most ample connections with other roads or good terminal facilities. The more of a railroad center Lexington becomes the less can railroads afford to pass us by. The time is not far distant when the uses of our land and its produce should stimulate us in our effort to obtain that which requires only a reasonable outlay and united, intelligent co-operation of county and city.—Lexington Press.

THE NEWS.
KENTUCKY KNOWLEDGE.

The Prohibitionists of Kentucky say they will poll fifty thousand votes next August.

—A runaway horse at Lebanon dashed into a private residence and demolished the furniture, the organ, and other household goods.

Col. John Gilmore, a gallant ex-Union soldier, it is understood, is an applicant for a pension. He is a son of the late Col. John Gilmore, and the brother of Captains John and Charles Gilmore.

Turn you see that this is a "long limb, it strikes the whole family," and we all benefited. But "Old Fogey" says "no, I don't want to pay any more taxes." Had he not better pay a little dividend there to him?

—A syndicate has invested $100,000 in real estate in Cumberland Gap. The investment is at equal divided between Kentucky and Tennessee.

—James M. Trotter, the colored man who was the chief witness in the trial of the Conspirators, and the defense of the colored and mixed races in the border shops of the Gulf Hotel, Louisville.

Kentucky built within a fraction one hundred miles of railroad last year. The record for the current year ought to show five hundred miles. In fact two hundred and sixty-eight miles are now in course of construction.

—Pulaski county George Taras attended a dance given at Nelson's distillery, and then raised a disturbance, in which he stabb'd four persons, one of whom, Bud Hutchinson, is not expected to recover.

Turn you see that this is a "long limb, it strikes the whole family," and we all benefited. But "Old Fogey" says "no, I don't want to pay any more taxes."

—A magnificient reel has been sent President Cleveland by Captain B. C. Milan, of Frankfort, Ky., who says he loves Grover for the fish he has caught.

The President, acknowledging the gift, says he has a longing to put it in use.

—Hon. J. H. Mulligan, of Lexington, is favorably mentioned by the State press as a candidate for Lieutenant Governor.

—The Stanton Monitor held an enthusiastic meeting last Saturday, on Col. John T. Hazelrigg, the editor of the Journal.

—The Stanton Monitor held an enthusiastic meeting last Saturday, on Col. John T. Hazelrigg, the editor of the Journal.

—Glasgow is considerably excited over a discovery of iron ore on the farm of Mr. C. C. Terry, about two miles from town. Mr. Terry recently went to Birmingham, Ala., on the charge of intimidating miners, and spent some time in the mines there. When he returned he found on his farm specimens of iron similar to those at Birmingham.

—At Owensboro, Ky., last week, children playing around the ruins of an old dwelling dug a kettle containing nearly a peck of copper and brass coins. Only one silver piece was found in the lot, dated 1805. The copper and brass pieces were of various nations, some being over two hundred years old.

Railroad Battles. The vast resources of Eastern Kentucky in coal, iron, stone, timber and timber, are attracting the attention of capitalists, and it will ultimately result in the construction of lines of transportation over which these elements of wealth can be conveyed to the markets of the world. Already two railroad companies are proposing to extend their lines through the state, and claims Fayette for forbidding the sale, and claims that it is its property.

—Coal fire thick was struck at the Renickie mines, near Madisonville, after a depth of 325 feet. Work was commenced on the mine about six months ago, and now the owners are rewarded by finding coal of the very best quality. It will be a short time until the mine is in full operation.

—In clearing away the debris of the river banks that recently caved in at Augusta, Ky., a large number of curious skulls and bones were discovered in the yard in front of Mrs. Frances Goldstein's residence. Upon examination they have been found to be the relics of aborigines, and some of the skulls were large enough to have belonged to an eight-foot man.

A sad accident occurred at Morehead May 1, the fatal N. J. Whicher was accidentally shot and killed by John Trumbo, a young man of that place. The ball, which was from a 44 caliber pistol, striking him just above the right eye, killing him instantly. Whicher's wife was sick bed in ten feet of where her husband was killed, and her cries were heart rending. The Mayor held an inquest, and the verdict was that he was shot by accident.

The apprehensions indulged in regard to the decreasing effect of the Industrial Commission Bill upon agriculture, have failed to materialize. There is more talk of railroad building in the present time than for a year past. In every direction surveys are being made, routes discussed, and building going on. Kentucky is a railroad enterprise, and the coming year or two promises more fruitful in railway completions than any year hitherto.—Greenup Herald.

—The location of this road through Clark and Fayette counties is now the topic of conversation—in the stores, in the saloons,—wherever men who take an active interest in the progress of our city and country meet. There seems to be but one sentiment in regard to this matter. All desire the road and seem willing to do all that can be done honorably and fairly to get the road.

To any person who will trade with me to the amount of $100 cash, I will send $100 in HAZEL GREEN PAPER. Or to any one owing me ten dollars or over who will pay it off in full, I will send THE HERALD free for one year.
